the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (19.5% of the population).

There are a number of reasons why the number of people aged 65 and over has increased. One of the main reasons is that people are living longer. The life expectancy at birth in the UK is now 78 years for men and 82 years for women (ONS 2004).

Another reason is that the number of people who are aged 65 and over has increased because of the increase in the number of people who are aged 65 and over who are still in the workforce.

The number of people aged 65 and over who are still in the workforce has increased from 1.5 million in 1990 to 2.5 million in 2004 (ONS 2004).

The increase in the number of people aged 65 and over who are still in the workforce is due to a number of factors.

One of the main factors is that people are working longer. The average age at which people retire in the UK is now 65 years (ONS 2004).

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased from 10.5 million to 12.5 million (12.5% of the population). The number of people in the public sector who are employed in the health sector has increased from 2.5 million to 3.5 million (3.5% of the population).

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has grown in size. One reason is that the population has aged, and older people are more likely to be employed in the public sector. Another reason is that the public sector has become more efficient, and this has led to a reduction in the number of people employed in the public sector. A third reason is that the public sector has become more competitive, and this has led to a reduction in the number of people employed in the public sector.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become more efficient. One reason is that the public sector has been able to reduce its costs. Another reason is that the public sector has been able to improve its productivity. A third reason is that the public sector has been able to reduce its waste.

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become more competitive. One reason is that the public sector has been able to reduce its prices.
